Chili Contest Calamity

Marissa* and her husband, Jason were stocked and ready to compete in the annual chili cook-off held in Huntington, West Virginia. They arrived a week early to visit Marissa's parents in nearby Barboursville, and psych themselves up for the event. But only four days before the competition, Marissa developed a fever and sore throat as well as chest pain when coughing. After her fever did not break for two days, Jason called Assist America for help.

Our medical coordinators referred Marissa to a nearby doctor where she was diagnosed with strep throat. She was prescribed an antibiotic and advised to rest. Thankfully Marissa convalesced quickly and was able to compete in the cook-off as planned. Another happy ending thanks to Assist America!
